

Consumer Privacy Funding Board

Alan Butler is Executive Director and President of the Electronic Privacy Information Center (EPIC) in Washington, D.C. Mr. Butler joined EPIC in 2011 and served as Interim Executive Director during 2020. Prior to his appointment as Executive Director, Mr. Butler managed EPIC's litigation, including the Amicus Program, and filed briefs in emerging privacy and civil liberties cases before the U.S. Supreme Court and other appellate courts. Mr. Butler has authored briefs on behalf of EPIC in significant privacy cases, including an amicus brief in Riley v. California that was cited in the Supreme Court's unanimous opinion upholding Fourth Amendment protections for cell phones. He has also authored briefs on national security, open government, workplace privacy, and consumer privacy issues. Mr. Butler is also Chair of the Privacy and Information Protection Committee of the ABA Section on Civil Rights and Social Justice. Mr. Butler is a graduate of UCLA School of Law and Washington University in St. Louis, where he earned a B.A. in Economics. He is a member of the DC Bar and the State Bar of California. (Excerpted from <https://epic.org/people/alan-butler>, please see that page for more complete information.)

Jeff Chester is Executive Director of the Center for Digital Democracy (CDD), a Washington, DC non-profit organization. CDD is one of the leading U.S. NGOs advocating for citizens, consumers and other stakeholders on digital privacy and consumer protections online. CDD has been spearheading initiatives designed to ensure that digital media in the broadband era fulfill their democratic potential. The organization is known for its cutting-edge analysis of digital media industry developments, as well as its capacity to bring critical issues to the forefront of public debate. A former investigative reporter, filmmaker and Jungian-oriented psychotherapist, Jeff Chester received his M.S.W. in Community Mental Health from U.C. Berkeley. He is the author of Digital Destiny: New Media and the Future of Democracy (The New Press, 2007), as well as articles in both the scholarly and popular press. (Excerpted from <https://democraticmedia.org/about/staff>, please see that page for more complete information.)

Emily Tucker is adjunct professor of law and the Executive Director at the Center on Privacy & Technology at Georgetown Law, where she leads a research and advocacy program dedicated to exposing and mitigating the impact of surveillance technology on historically marginalized communities. The Center has published groundbreaking studies on law enforcement use of face recognition, and government surveillance of immigrant communities. Professor Tucker's individual scholarship and popular writing critiques carceral technology from an abolitionist perspective. Before coming to Georgetown, Professor Tucker worked for over a decade as a movement lawyer, supporting grassroots groups to organize, litigate, and legislate against the criminalization and surveillance of poor communities and communities of color. She was senior staff attorney for immigrant rights at the Center for Popular Democracy and policy director at Detention Watch Network, where she is now a member of the Board. She is a graduate of McGill University, Harvard Divinity School, and Boston University Law School. (Excerpted from <https://www.law.georgetown.edu/faculty/emily-tucker/>, please see that page for more complete information.)

Nicole Ozer is the Technology and Civil Liberties Director for the ACLU of Northern California and has directed the ACLU's cutting-edge integrated advocacy work in California to defend and promote civil liberties and civil rights in the digital world since 2004. Nicole is a nationally recognized expert on issues at the intersection of technology and government surveillance, consumer privacy, free speech, and broader civil rights. Nicole spearheaded the passage of the landmark California Electronic Communications Privacy Act (CalECPA) and California Reader Privacy Act, designed groundbreaking local surveillance reform strategies now used across the United States, and also developed the ACLU's national online privacy campaign, Demand Your dotRights. Nicole graduated magna cum laude from Amherst College, studied comparative civil rights history at the University of Cape Town, South Africa, and earned her J.D. with a Certificate in Law and Technology from Berkeley Law in 2003. (Excerpted from <https://www.aclunc.org/staff/nicole-ozar-esq-sheher>, please see that page for more complete information.)